

Leading Change

Empowering and equipping leaders to manage and lead change with insight.

In today's disruptive world, effective change leadership is no longer a nice-to-have, but an essential skill.

Overview

We live in a world where disruption is the norm. Globalization, the digital era, the environmental crisis, changing demographics – all of these factors are impacting our organizations and the way we work. As a result, effective change leadership – both in being equipped to manage change but also lead and inspire change in others – is no longer a nice-to-have, but an essential skill.

Korn Ferry research into many leadership models, shows that most change methods don't go deep enough because they focus on the extrinsic. This program equips participants to become successful change leaders by focusing on the intrinsic – the unconscious preferences and motivators that drive behavior.

In this program, leaders will gain insight about their core inclinations and mindset around change and learn ways to shift their mindsets to become more skilled at adapting and managing it. In addition, participants will learn the techniques to inspire and engage others through change.

The program uses a variety of learning techniques, including strategies for managing participants' own change initiative to learn how to adapt their leadership approach in the context of their specific change challenge.
