Introduction

Korn Ferry’s Global Marketing Center of Expertise surveyed over 480 Chief Marketing Officers (CMOs) and marketing leaders from the Korn Ferry database of top U.S. companies. Exploring a wide variety of issues, including customer-centricity, digital transformation, the most important CMO competency and top challenges marketing leaders are facing when carrying out change agendas, the 2015 Marketing Pulse Survey sheds light on the key issues facing CMOs as they tackle today’s marketing and business challenges.

Through an aggregation of marketing leaders’ opinions on critical business issues impacting their companies and their jobs, this survey ultimately reveals a pulse of what is driving marketing decisions in the C-suite.

In today’s market, the need to create a more customer-centric and seamless brand experience is increasing the complexity of the marketing role. With the business environment, customers’ expectations and innovation cycle all growing in complexity, the need for marketing leaders to adapt to new and often unfamiliar environments, as well as serve as a catalyst for organization-wide change continues to grow. The Marketing Pulse Survey dives deep into the challenges characterizing the marketing landscape by revealing what is keeping CMOs up at night and the challenges that are impacting their roles and business strategies.
Nine in 10 marketing leaders agree that their organization is trying to become more customer-centric when it comes to their strategic initiatives and overall business goals. As a result, it comes as no surprise that creating sustainable and engaging customer relationships and improving the customer experience is what keeps most marketers up at night. Other pressing issues facing CMOs include the ability to demonstrate Marketing’s ROI and staying ahead and taking advantage of digital tools to create meaningful business insights.

What keeps you up at night?

- Ability to demonstrate marketing’s ROI: 38%
- Aligning marketing with the overall business strategy: 24%
- Staying ahead and taking advantage of the digital technology to create meaningful business insights: 15%
- Creating sustainable and engaging customer relationships and improving the customer experience: 23%

To what extent do you agree with the following statement:

“My organization is trying to become more customer-centric when it comes to our strategic initiatives and overall business goals.”

- Strongly agree: 44%
- Agree: 46%
- Disagree: 7%
- Strongly disagree: 1%
- My organization is already as customer-centric as it should be: 2%
Marketing leaders struggle to align the organization around the change agendas they were hired to drive. Marketers also believe this inability to drive organizational change is the biggest contributing factor to low CMO tenure. Other factors contributing to low CMO tenure include an inability to directly connect marketing efforts to tangible business outcomes, and the inability by organizational leaders to provide a clear mandate for the CMO role. Taking a closer look at the obstacles preventing CMOs from carrying out change within their organizations, nearly half of marketing executives indicate that when addressing “digital disruption,” the board and/or CEO are aware of the potential impact, but are not actively addressing the changes.

What do you feel is the biggest contributing factor to low CMO tenure when compared to other C-suite functions?

- Inability to align the organization around a change agenda the CMO was hired to drive: 40%
- Inability to leverage the right customer data to drive meaningful engagement: 12%
- Inability to align marketing deliverables with CEO objectives: 37%
- Inability by organizational leaders to provide a clear mandate for the CMO role: 4%
- Inability to directly connect marketing efforts to tangible business outcomes: 6%

When addressing “digital disruption” with my company’s board and/or CEO, they are:

- Taking proactive steps to stay ahead of the changing digital landscape: 12%
- Aware of the potential impact, but are not actively addressing the changes: 41%
- Unconcerned of the risks/opportunities of digital disruption as it relates to our organization: 47%
A key component of CMOs’ digital transformation agendas is personalizing the customer experience, which an overwhelming majority of marketing leaders agree is a key priority for their organization. To do so, CMOs are engaging with customers via social and digital channels, developing “one view” of the customer approach and seamless messaging across different communication channels, and leveraging data analytics to differentiate product offerings. CMOs are also drawing upon a wide-variety of marketing channels—primarily e-mail alerts, Facebook, online advertising, promotional events and the sales team—to further engage with customers.

When leveraging social platforms, the top three strategies marketing leaders are employing include engaging via direct customer communication; leveraging social analytics to inform business strategy; and creating and implementing highly targeted ads and promotions. The responsibility of managing the post-purchase experience, according to marketing leaders, is held by the customer service department.

To what extent do you agree with the following statement:

“Personalizing the customer experience is a key priority for my organization.”

- Strongly agree: 1%
- Agree: 11%
- Neither agree nor disagree: 30%
- Disagree: 19%
- Strongly disagree: 1%

Which department within the organization is currently most responsible for managing the customers’ post-purchase experience?

- Marketing: 38%
- Sales: 16%
- Communications: 16%
- Operations: 16%
- Customer service: 1%
- No one: 8%
- Other: 5%
Please rank the steps which you are taking to personalize the customer experience in order of priority (1=highest; 4=lowest)

1. Developing “one view of the customer approach” and seamless messaging across different communication channels
2. Leveraging data analytics to personalize the customer experience and differentiate product offerings
3. Engaging with customers via social and digital channels
4. Other

Seven in 10 CMOs agree customer data has inspired their marketing strategy to become more customer-focused. The survey found that leveraging data to learn more about and connect with customers has been the most effective application for analytics for CMOs, followed by measuring business outcomes of creative programs. Therefore, it’s not surprising that almost half of marketing leaders expect their company to increase its use of real-time predictive analytics by 25% this year to learn more about and connect with customers; nearly one-fourth predict a 26-50% increase.

To what extent do you agree with the following statement: “Customer data is influencing my company’s overall marketing strategy to become more buyer-led.”
